What are you looking for?

Deployments and mobilizations have changed in recent years, getting longer, occurring more frequently, and often putting service members in harm's way. These changes have caused additional stress for service members and families, and have increased the challenges of maintaining readiness, managing separations, and planning successful reunions.

Plan My Deployment was designed to help you address these issues and may be used in coordination with your installation and National Guard and reserve family support programs. With Plan My Deployment you can take some of the stress out of deployment or mobilization, through access to planning tools, checklists, and helpful tips. Whether it's your first deployment or mobilization or your fifth, you will be able to create a unique checklist for the Pre-deployment, Homecoming, and Reintegration stages that contains only the information you and your family need to successfully navigate the process.

Talking Points — Updated March 2016

Keeping a relationship strong can be complicated in its own right, let alone when you add the challenges that come from being apart due to a deployment. Along with topics like the method and frequency of communication, you are faced with changes in roles and responsibilities and may find yourself doing things like yard work, taking out the trash or perhaps having to be the sole caregiver for your children. Any change in your normal routine can bring about a range of strong emotions and affect your stress levels.

Resources:

- Podcasts
- Educational materials
- Confidential non-medical counseling
  - Secure, live video sessions make it even more convenient to schedule time with a non-medical counselor from anywhere in the world. You can arrange an individual session or combined session with your spouse or significant other.

During deployment: children and teens

Topics

- Keeping routines as normal as possible
- Interacting and connecting with your children and teens
- Entertaining and educating your children and teens

Resources

Deployment can be especially challenging for teenagers, and they may act out in ways that can be challenging for you as a parent. Patience, communication and love can help everyone's stress level.

Your tips

This can be a valuable teaching moment for your teen. Use these 15 tips to help:

- Have a family discussion. Talk to your teen about how the deployment will affect each family member. Discuss any changes to their routine, responsibilities, communication, fears and concerns about something happening to you.
- Plan alone time with your teenager before you deploy. Allow your teen to plan special activities, or just spend time relaxing together before you go.
- Swap keepsakes. Trade sentimental items, and explain the significance of the items you choose. Consider keepsakes such as pictures, notes, recordings or other special mementos.
- Encourage teens to share feelings with you. Let teens know that you want to hear their concerns. Know, too, that teens may not want to share their feelings. It's OK if they need space.

Talking Points — Updated March 2016

We've talked about what resources Military OneSource has to help adults through deployment, but Military OneSource can also help children and teens cope with separation during deployment. We can also provide parents with material and resources that promote interaction and connection, both with the parent who is deploying and the parent who is in charge at home.

- The “Sesame Street: Talk, Listen and Connect” DVD is a bilingual multimedia outreach program designed to support military families with children between the ages of two and five by letting them relate to Elmo’s experience as his family member deploys, returns home and prepares to deploy again.

Whether you will be at home with the children, or you’re the deploying parent, child care could be a concern. Military OneSource offers many services, such as child care locators and articles on how to choose a caregiver including the article “7 Things to Consider When Looking for Child Care.”

Deployment can be especially hard on teenagers, who are often experiencing turmoil of their own simply because of their age. But your support can go a long way toward helping your teenager deal with the difficulties of your deployment.

- In fact, as the “15 Tips for Helping Your Teenager Deal With the Difficulties of Deployment” article, and others like it, may help you, your teen and the rest of your family get through deployment.

Tutor.com provides tutoring the way it was meant to be.

- You get an expert tutor for more than 16 subjects 24/7, and your child will work one-on-one with the tutor in an online classroom on your specific problem until it’s done.
- You never need to make an appointment – or even leave the house!
- You can get a tutor whenever you want, from anywhere in the world.

Making it through a deployment may bring about the need to evaluate financial changes that may occur. Perhaps the car breaks down or your stove needs repair, or maybe you get a bonus from work or a refund from the electric company. Each of these requires you to take time to look at your finances for any necessary adjustments to budgets and spending.

- Financial calculators can help you in many aspects of financial decision-making. (Should I refinance? How much car can I afford? Should I rent or buy? What will my investment be worth in the future? How long will it take me to pay off my loan? Should I consolidate my loans? How long will my retirement savings last?)
- Consumer protection resources can help you stay informed and protected when you are considering a large purchase. Military OneSource consumer protection resources include: webinars, articles, podcasts and links including to the Military Consumer, Better Business Bureau, Better Business Bureau Military Line, Federal Trade Commission, Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and Internal Revenue Service.
